

International Coalition on Climate Action For Prevention Science

ICCAPS is an international coalition dedicated to raising awareness of how climate change impacts human health and well-being. Building resilient communities and providing families with support for coping with both acute and chronic climate events are issues important for building a future with hope. This worldwide coalition is a collaborative network with representatives from Society for Prevention Research (SPR), European Society for Prevention Research (EUSPR) and the Brazilian Association for Prevention Science and Health Promotion (BRAPEP).

Climate actions to date include: organizing conference sessions; soliciting input regarding emerging climate issues related to physical, mental, social and spiritual well-being that require action; and promoting awareness of relevant prevention science and best practices. ICCAPS welcomes new members and organizational representatives to join our international efforts to make a difference.

For information about climate action sessions at the 2024 SPR Conference and for more information about ICCAPS:

<https://iccaps.uib.eu>